WHAT IS HAKOMI?

The Hakomi Method is based on the lifelong work of Ron Kurtz, the originator of Hakomi, who continues to develop and refine the work. It is essentially a method of assisted self-study and emotional healing based on loving presence and mindfulness.

The principles and techniques of Hakomi offer a powerful framework for facilitating self-study. Through focused attention on present experience in all its forms (thoughts, feelings, body sensations, and memories) we can become aware of the deep habits through which we live life, and the beliefs that are their roots. Such beliefs shape and color our experience of life, and often are the cause of unnecessary suffering. Once they are brought to awareness, new experiences are possible. New experiences give rise to new beliefs which in turn can bring about more life-giving habits.

Under the guidance of Ron Kurtz and Donna Martin, VHEN's training model is a multi-level learning experience which includes new, continuing and advanced students. Each training session presents Hakomi holistically... the essence of the whole method being present in each session, with participants learning at their own rate. The "level" of each participant depends upon previous training and experience, as well as the person's own natural aptitude and affinity for the method.

WHO WOULD BENEFIT FROM HAKOMI TRAINING?

This training would benefit anyone who has an interest in understanding themselves and others and in working with present mind-body experience. It is suitable for people new to Hakomi and students learning at more advanced levels of the Method. We welcome Hakomi therapists, teachers and trainers, as well as therapists, bodyworkers and yoga teachers. Anyone in a care-giving or people-based work (medicine, nursing, counseling) will find within this method techniques to enhance their professional practice and to help prevent burnout.

LEVELS OF TRAINING:

A diploma of completion in the basic Hakomi method requires a minimum of thirty days.

The advanced level training requires twelve days of instruction.

Certification as a Hakomi therapist involves basic training, advanced training, coaching with a certified trainer, and then demonstration of competency live or via videotaped sessions to at least two trainers. This usually takes from one to five years. Until this certification is completed, the person may call him or herself an advanced student of Hakomi.

COST: $125 per day plus GST
